March 02, 2020 -
AEI Decon, based in Salt Lake City, Utah, has announced that they offer methamphetamine decontamination services in Utah. They utilize proprietary products and decontamination systems that provide homeowners, investors and REO brokers with timely and cost-effective clean up of methamphetamine residues in homes.

Nate Coombs, owner, and general manager of AEI Decon says, ?We are certified by the Utah Department of Environmental Quality (DEQ) to promote the well-being of Utah?s citizens. As certified decontamination specialists, we are licensed by the DEQ to perform the necessary decontamination procedures required in a meth lab and meth user site decontamination and cleanup. The certification is imposed in order to protect the health and safety of both our customers and our own employees, ensuring that safety is put above everything else when we are taking care of a decontamination project.?

As certified documentation specialists, they require all of their employees to undergo the OSHA 40-hour HAZWOPER training. Each employee also undergoes a refresher training course every year to renew the certification annually. The company works with local health and law enforcement departments to ensure public safety. All of the company?s workers use the most effective and safest procedures when performing decontamination services.

The DEQ doesn?t allow just anybody to perform meth decontamination because dealing with the residues of a meth lab or other meth contaminated material is a dangerous task. They need to become a certified decontamination specialist and the application process is strict and there are only a few people who are given such a certification.

There is actually more meth contamination in Utah than what many people expect. Meth contaminated properties can be anywhere. They could be located in a house just across the street or in the apartment downstairs in what appears to be a safe neighborhood. The issue is that meth houses are not just dangerous for the drug makers, dealers, and users, they also pose a risk to everyone. The chemicals that are found in such properties are capable of negatively affecting everyone, even severely in a number of cases. People who notice strange chemical smells are encouraged to report these to the authorities.

In meth production, common household chemicals are used. However, when these are combined, they produce dangerous toxins. And because of the flammable nature of the chemicals utilized, meth production is often discovered only after it causes a house fire. Because meth production, storage, and distribution are illegal, these activities are often accompanied by security measures such as CCTV cameras, guard dogs, and no trespassing signs. People who notice such things may want to report them to the authorities.

Meanwhile, meth testing is recommended to people who buy, sell or rent a property to ensure that the inhabitants would be safe from the health problems that could result from methamphetamine contamination and residue. Real estate agents, business owners, rental property owners, families, and property buyers would find it a good idea to have meth testing performed on their property.

A thorough cleanup or decontamination is the only way to eliminate those health hazards that are present in a property that has been contaminated by meth production or use. This includes the removal of all contaminated materials, such as flooring, sheet-rock, counter-tops, cabinets, fixtures and other items that are not a part of the house structure.

AEI Decon applies a meth decontamination solution in a process that is much better than just cleaning. The products that are applied by their certified technicians have been proven to be safe and effective in getting rid of the meth residue from any building structure. With their decontamination method, there is no need for costly demolition. The product that they use to decontaminate is non-corrosive, non-hazardous, environmentally-friend, completely biodegradable and safe for humans, animals, and structures. They also ensure that the privacy of clients is protected, using vehicles and trailers that are not marked with the name of the company to avoid unwanted queries from neighbors and other people.
