Sunsella, a business based in Las Vegas, Nevada, has announced that Banksy has officially launched its Gross Domestic Product online store. This particular online store features a range of dystopian homeware items, such as a rat race clock or a static-filled HD TV set. Every item is designed to provide a social commentary on various issues, ranging from the refugee crisis to the sugar-filled diets of children.

Most of the Gross Domestic Product items, some of which offer no function at all, are available for purchase immediately through a lottery. All of the items have been signed by the artist and in order to control demand, the website requires people who are interested in buying to answer a question on why art matters. In cases where the demand is more than the supply, the answer to the question will be used as a basis for determining who would be allowed to make a purchase. Thus, those who are interested in buying are advised to make their answer as informative, amusing or enlightening as possible.

The launch of the online shop came on the heels of the opening of Banksy's Croydon store launch. The physical and online stores were established by the elusive British artist to secure the trademark for 'Banksy' as a greeting card company had previously attempted to claim for itself his moniker as a way of selling branded merchandise.

According to the artist, the new website offers a diverse collection of ?art, homewares and disappointment.? Meanwhile, the artist had stated that the first releases are for lower-income customers and that wealthy art collectors should refrain from making a purchase at the present time.

The artist explained that while the Banksy physical and online stores also offer refunds and comply with regulations on data protection just like any shop, all of the products that are being sold are made in an art studio and not in a manufacturing facility. They also try to utilize recycled materials whenever possible. Those who want to make a purchase are required to register their personal details and answer the question previously mentioned.

Meanwhile, SunSella is a home and kitchen products company that sells their items online. One of the available products from the company is the 5 Pack Adhesive Spice Clips. These are very strong adhesive spice bottle grippers. These are guaranteed to be able to stick to kitchen cupboard doors, allowing consumers to orderly access their spice bottles and more. This is made from heavy duty stainless steel and it can be utilized by professional chefs or in home cooking. It can be used as a baking tool for dough and bread, and it can also be used for flipping burgers or for cleaning barbecue grills or a bench top or hot plate. It can also be useful in slicing and chopping vegetables. It also be utilized for cleaning bench tops, counter tops, chopping boards, and more.
