The side edges have a black finish and the unique custom sign is expected to become a conversation piece for the next Halloween party.

The collection of Halloween wall signs that have been added by Widdlytinks includes creepy designs, all printed on canvas and available in a range of sizes. Aside from the above mentioned "Something Wicked?"

canvas, there is also a lightly distressed art piece featuring an anatomically correct skeleton. This particular wall sign is expected to be suitable as a Halloween décor and a medical office décor, for physicians who want some slightly eerie fine art for their office.

There are a number of wall signs with Halloween related phrases, including "Hocus Pocus" with a skull, the number 31 on black with spiders, "Trick or Treat" with a spider web, including the line "Something Wicked This Way Comes," in a fancy font on a dark brown background. There are also several signs for "potion shops" in a Gothic style, which provides a different kind of artistic touch to the home or office this Halloween.

Considered to be the most popular among the new additions in their new Spooky Haunted House Halloween Sign. This sign uses a thin, eerie font in white over a brown background, both with a distressed texture. The text on the canvas reads, "Haunted House" with "Enter if you dare" in smaller font underneath. The canvas prints at Widdlytinks feature dried pine stretcher bars that have been proven to not warp or bow with time. The canvas used is a thick, archival grade, durable, poly-cotton blend canvas that is acid free and pH neutral to make sure that the canvas will always look good as the day it arrived.

The frame used for the canvas prints is one inch and a half deep, and comes with pre-installed sawtooth hanger so that it arrives ready to hang on any wall with just a nail or hook some other hanging apparatus. Every canvas is made to order to ensure that it will not spend time sitting in a warehouse, possibly collecting dust and getting damaged.
