Metal Roof Inspection in London is the Key to Making Metal Roofs There Last Longer

Without a doubt, there are few roof coverings that are made that are as durable as metal roofing materials. Metal roofs hold up well against the elements, shed water very well, and even greatly resist the damage that ice buildup causes to other types of roof coverings. All of this sometimes lures customers into a false sense of security as far as thinking their metal roof is completely maintenance-free. Cub Roofing of London, Ontario warns this is simply not the case. That's exactly why they recommend that everyone that owns a metal roof in the London area get it inspected on an annual basis.

Company spokesperson Bella Reynolds says this about why it's important to periodically get a metal roof inspected, "Anyone who invests in a metal roof has made a very wise roofing choice. Metal roof toughness is unquestioned but it still should be looked at every year to make sure it's kept watertight and has not suffered any damage from wind or other elements. Metal is also a material that expands and contracts with the seasons and this too can cause its own set of problems. Age plays a factor also as metal will start to deteriorate some over time. That's why the older a metal roof is the more important these yearly inspections become. When done by experienced roofing professionals like ours, a metal roof inspection can help to greatly extend the life of any homeowner's metal roofing panels."

Reynolds went on to say that there are some specific things that their well-trained metal roof professionals look for when they are doing an inspection. They will do such things as making sure no metal panels sections have worked themselves loose. The seams between panels are also checked to make sure they still form a watertight seal. Their roofing inspectors will also look for signs of severe corrosion and make sure chimney flashing and vent pipe seals are still doing their job too.

The company does much more than just metal roof inspection London too. They offer a wide variety of Metal Roof Services. If when they are doing a metal roof inspection for someone they find a problem they are also very good at doing all types of metal roof repairs. This covers everything from fixing leaks to replacing damaged or corroded metal roof sections. Cub Roofing's crews can even install snowguards that help give a London metal roof extra protection during harsh winters.

Reynolds also pointed out that their roofing crews are experts when it comes to installing complete new metal roofs. Metal roofs can be added as replacement roof coverings on existing homes or installed on newly constructed homes. A customer can even select from a variety of different grades of metal such as galvanized steel, copper, aluminum, and budget-friendly corrugated metal. They even install standing seam metal roofing panels for those that want a virtually leak-proof roof that looks great.

Metal is not the only roof coverings that their crews are experienced working with either. They have many years of experience laying down shingle roofing products and more decorative architectural shingles. The company also offers a large variety of commercial flat roof services.

For those in the London, Ontario area whose roof has seen better days, Cub Roofing also offers complete reroofing services. They can even do an entire roof replacement on those homes that have structural rot or other problems below the existing roof covering.
