October 28, 2019 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Toronto, ON (October 29, 2019): Licensed Insolvency Trustee Richard Killen has launched a new podcast. The Glass Is Half Full, a podcast for people that are struggling to get ahead financially and focuses on saving money, debt relief, reducing stress and having fun with little or no money.

Having recently celebrated 25 years in the business helping people get out of debt we have witnessed firsthand, the worry, stress and debt's effect on people's health, their family and their work performance.

Richard Killen says, "This show is about helping people that are struggling to get by or at least feel like they are."

The podcast will interview experts that will share their knowledge and people that will share their personal stories on how they overcame financial obstacles.

The biggest takeaway that the host would like to get across to listeners is "Financial challenges can be a temporary situation. There is light at the end of the tunnel, and this podcast will help you get there."

Some of the recent guests interviewed thus far include a bankruptcy lawyer, financial planner, mortgage and insurance experts, spiritual leaders and authors. Topics range from how to save money, reducing risk and how to do more with less money.

Fans of the podcast can contact Ken Wells via email or visit the website to provide feedback and ideas for the podcast, or to become a guest on the show.

The podcast is available on The Glass Is Half Full website and all major platforms including Apple Podcasts, Spotify, Google Podcast, Stitcher, iHeart Radio, TuneIN + Alexa.

Richard Killen & Associates, with offices conveniently located across the GTA, have been helping Canadians resolve their debt issues since 1992.
