

AquaOx Recommends Its Whole House Water Filter As A Safeguard Against Potential Water Pollution

November 22, 2019

Columbia, South Carolina - November 22, 2019 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

AquaOx Water Filters, a South Carolina based with expertise in water filtration, has issued a warning regarding the possibility of hazardous elements making their way into the city's water supply. The company says that, at any given time, there is a high probability of harmful contaminants and elements being accidentally released in the source of drinking water. The company recommends the use of its in-house Whole House Water Filter as a safeguard against such contamination. Potential customers can contact the company through their phone number available on their website at <https://www.aquaoxwaterfilters.com/whole-house-water-filter/>.

Since the Flint water crisis in 2014, there has been national scrutiny on the treatment and usage of valuable water resources. Over 100,000 residents were exposed to elevated lead levels due to insufficient water treatment after switching the drinking water source from Lake Huron and the Detroit River to the less costly source of the Flint River. AquaOx says that such an incident could manifest in any part of the country due to the constant change in policies and budgetary expenses. AquaOx recommends that any homeowner should be prepared in case of the worst possible scenario.

Other notable incidents of water contamination in the country include the water contamination that led to high rates of leukemia in Woburn, Massachusetts, pollution due to release of toxic water at Gold King Mine in Silverton, Colorado, the Martin County coal slurry spill, and the pollution of the Emory River in Roane County Tennessee in 2008. It has been found in studies that more than half of U.S. stream and river miles continue to violate federal water quality standards. When lakes, ponds, and reservoirs were surveyed it was found that around 70 percent of them were impaired. The common causes of this pollution are municipal sewage spills, urban runoff, industrial pollution, and agricultural pollution. AquaOx warns that such unforeseen incidents can have a permanent impact on the health of the families living in the affected areas.

AquaOx representative, Michael Corcoran says, "We are always striving to create solutions to ensure the health and wellbeing of Americans. After the unfortunate incident in Flint that gained national attention, we were dedicated to creating an easy-to-use product that would mitigate the cost to human health and protect families in times of crisis. The solution we came up with is easy to install and will help prevent against a lot of contaminants, such as lead, if such a calamity were to strike in any part of the country. That is how the latest version of the whole house water filter was born.
