In his five star review, Pacheco C. said, ?These guys are great. They help me boost my credit score in a matter of weeks. I was so impressed with their commitment to helping me. They were so helpful and very friendly. I would definitely recommend this company looking to repair their credit.?

Poser Tubes Credit Repair also wants people to know that there are a number of things on a person?s credit history that can affect credit score. These include judgements, late payments, collections accounts, bankruptcies, foreclosures, paid for less than the amount due, charge offs, and paid charge offs.

It is also important for people to know that the process of rebuilding one?s credit can take a long time. It could take weeks, months and years instead of just days, and it will also require a sustained effort to maintain the needed change. With a steady and determined approach, people may be able to see changes in their credit score within three to six months. During that span of time, people will be able to notice a slight increase in their credit score each month, and they may find that lenders are more open to working with them. With regards to late payments and collections, it may take up to seven years for their negative effects to disappear from a person?s credit file. But it should be noted that the closer a person gets to the seven-year mark, the less impact these black marks will have on the person. This doesn?t necessary imply that it will take seven years to repair a person?s credit history. It just means that it will be after seven years that the person?s credit file will be genuinely clear. By striving steadily to meet payments and clear debt, a person would be able to notice improvements within six months to one year, with these improvements having a positive effect on the person?s financial options.

With regards to credit score, what is considered to be a good credit score can actually be subjective and vary between providers. However, in general, the top limit is around 800 to 850, with these scores being considered as excellent. At the other end are those who have a score of 300 or less, which are considered to be poor and risky from the point of view of potential lenders. Majority of credit scores are within the 600 to 750 range, with those at the lower end of 300 to 579 not likely to be approved for credit.

Poser Tubes Credit Repair operates by getting rid of blemishes on a person?s credit report. As they actively work on improving clients? credit, they will be able to monitor what is happening in their credit reporting dashboard. They operate 100 percent remote, so that people would be able to work with them from anywhere in the United States.

Poser Tubes Credit Repair also provides a credit repair progress report each month so that clients will know which negative items have been removed from their credit history, which items are in progress, and what are the next steps to be taken in fixing their credit score. They will also suggest a credit monitoring service that will allow clients to see if their credit score is improving.
