December 18, 2019 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Pensacola, FL. ? Craig Vigodsky, a divorce attorney in Pensacola FL, is reaching out to divorced parents in the Pensacola community to advise on how to share kids profitably during the holidays. Craig Vigodsky is sharing this family law advice in response to the many families that struggle with sharing children between divorced parents during Christmas.

Divorces, even the most civil ones, leave an aftermath that can be very messy. Craig Vigodsky shares how Florida?s divorce system used to leave one parent primary custody of children, which made sharing children either nonexistent or irrelevant. The new system, however, gives both parents the responsibility and custody of a child, which can make the holidays complicated.

Concerning the new system, Vigodsky stated, ?Instead of designating one parent as the custodial parent who takes on the primary child care and decision-making duties, courts now assume that both parents will retain responsibility for the care of their minor children and that both will participate in making decisions related to their health, welfare, and education.?

Vigodsky explained since divorced parents are equally responsible for their children under the new system, they are both equally entitled to time during the holidays. The divorce attorney then shared several tips on how to share children without too much conflict.

The Pensacola family attorney shared with his community that if divorced parents had previously agreed on a time-sharing schedule during the divorce case itself, they must abide by that schedule.

Craig Vigodsky also shared that the best way to share quality time with children during Christmas is just to be flexible. Vigodsky states that parents who are willing to work with each other are much better off finding a solution.

No matter the situation and eventual solution, Craig Vigodsky wishes everyone a Happy Holidays.
