Valencia, California -- As summer vacation is about to come to a close parents are looking for fun things to do as a family. Rave reviews have been coming in about a simple gadget that combines music and scavenger hunting. It uses a very affordable vibration technology and can turn almost any object into a music playing speaker.

It's unbelievably great! We spent hours as a family looking for objects to connect to this device. Who would have thought that we would be dancing to a mirror who was telling us to "move it, move it",? stated Raul Meza, father of four.

A vibration speaker connects to your phone or mp3 player with one port then connects to an object of your choice with the other end. Once you hit play on your music device the signal is sent to the object through vibration. Upon hitting the object the vibration then pours out as music. Some items only produce a vague to clear muffle while other will sound as clear, loud, and pristine as many speakers that you will find on the market today. The fun lies in trying out different objects and finding the best and funniest ones.

The device uses two triple A batteries and plays for hours of uninterrupted use. It's also set up to be used with an optional AC connector. It's about four inches in diameter, light weight and very portable. It comes in a box with easy to follow instructions and is user friendly.

We would set a timer for one minute and run around the house looking for objects that we can use. Then we would gather to test the object and see who found the funniest or best sounding one. My daughter's pencil box sounded amazing, my son's lollipop not so much, stated Meza. We got ours at Amazon for under twenty bucks and I've got to tell you, it was perfect for some inexpensive family fun. Way cheaper than the movies and our kids loved it!
