

Arrowhead Clinic Explains How Chiropractic Care Can Change a Person's Life in New Blog Post

December 30, 2019

ATLANTA, GA - December 30, 2019 -

Arrowhead Clinic, based in Atlanta, Georgia, has announced that they have recently published a blog post that explains how people can use chiropractic care for life-changing results. The article is titled, "8 Ways Chiropractic Care Will Change Your Life" and describes the various potentially life-changing benefits from chiropractic care. The article explains that even people who feel fine may benefit from chiropractic care because there might be something wrong that they are not yet aware of.

Johnny Brown, a spokesperson for Arrowhead Clinic, says, "Chiropractic care is more than a fix for your back pain. Although it is an excellent option for back pain, it does so much more than that. Chiropractic care offers patients a variety of potentially life-changing benefits. In the article we have recently published, we discuss eight ways chiropractic care can change your life."

First of all, regular chiropractic care can boost a person's productivity because it can prevent work-related injuries, such as low back pain and carpal tunnel syndrome. Low back pain that is left untreated can result in absences and higher medical expenses. Chiropractic care can restore the correct spinal alignment with the result that low back pain is relieved or at least minimized. Athletes can also enjoy a boost in their athletic performance when they undergo regular chiropractic care.

Chiropractic care can also cause a person to become smarter because brain mapping studies have shown that it can stimulate cognitive function. Researchers have found that cervical manipulation results in the activation of certain neurological pathways in the brain, thus possibly stimulating cognitive function.

The Atlanta chiropractor also explained that chiropractic care can reduce stress by allowing the body to achieve the balance that it requires. It can also help remove any impediments to performing regular exercise, which is essential in getting rid of stress and preventing anxiety and depression that often result. Studies have also shown that chiropractic adjustments can possibly reduce symptoms of depression.

Another way that chiropractic care can change a person's life is that it can help in minimizing the use of medications, which often have dangerous side effects. Even those medications that are considered safe and can be purchased over the counter have negative effects on the body, including the gastrointestinal system. Studies have shown that people who focus on prevention instead are able to avoid rebound headaches, which are caused by the overuse of painkillers in treating headaches.

Still another way that chiropractic care can change a person's life is that it can enhance overall wellness. This is because chiropractors often discuss with patients how certain work habits can affect health, such as sitting at a desk for eight hours.

Also, chiropractic care can help in alleviating pain. Painkillers may work but they only mask the pain without treating its real cause. Headaches, low back pain, and other kinds of pain are often related to dysfunctional areas in the spine, which are called vertebral subluxations where the spinal bones are misaligned.

And it is not just pain that chiropractic care can prevent. A growing body of scientific research shows that chiropractic adjustments can prevent a broad range of conditions. These include high blood pressure, infantile colic, ear infections, and Parkinson's disease. This is because vertebral subluxations can affect how the nervous system functions, resulting in a number of health problems, according to several studies.

And finally, chiropractic care can improve a person's sleep because there is less pain and anxiety, which can often interfere with a person's sleep. With improved sleep, health is further improved because better sleep means a better immune system that can prevent disease. This is important because prevention is really better than cure. Being able to avoid infections can really change a person's life as it frees him or her from the need for medications that have harmful side effects.
