Moscow, Idaho based Holstery, a company that primarily sells their products online, is proud to announce that their tape measure holder has surpassed 50 5-Star customer reviews, maintaining an outstanding overall review score as well. This was the first product launched by the company, which recently launched a tactical tool holster to further ease the daily routine of handymen whose job requires them to carry a variety of tools with them at all times.

Josh Hartung, a representative of Holstery, states, "It is with pride that we welcome the outstanding wave of support that we have received from our customers, who appear to be remarkably happy with our product and how it makes carrying around their tools a remarkably easier task. We will continue striving to improve our product even further and implement the feedback that we have received. We reassure our customers that their comments are valuable to us."

Hartung designed this product after working as a contractor for several years and struggling with low-quality tool-belts. He found that the main problem with traditional tool belts is their massive size, cheap build, and poor construction, which made them more of a hassle than a solution. This prompted him to design an alternative that addressed all of these issues through Holstery, a customer-centred company that is determined to help handymen and creative enthusiasts across the country enjoy more convenience as they work.

Most of the positive comments that the company has received outline the utility of their tape measure holster, stating how it can facilitate certain tasks in a construction site. One of their most recent reviews, left on their website by Zach Thicksten, states that the product is the, "Best purchase I've made in a while! My tape is on and off my hip frequently when I check quality. This makes putting the tape back on your hip a one-handed deal, knowing it's secure. If a tape falls there's potential for the tip to become bent, affecting the accuracy. This is a great solution."

Another of their testimonials says that the found the product they purchased, "Very durable and functional. The fact that it has a clip is really nice too, you don't have to weave it through your belt each morning. I'm really enjoying using this holder. I was using a Milwaukee tape measure and it was very difficult to slide in, not bashing the holder. Just keep in mind that certain tapes might fit better with this product. I recently bought a Klein tape measure, and it works very well with the holder. Strongly recommend this product!"

Similar experiences have been shared on the company's Amazon page. Andre Martin says, "The quality of this product is outstanding. I carry a tape measure on a daily basis for work. I was tired of struggling to get the clip over my belt. I would recommend this belt clip to anyone who uses a tape measure on a regular basis. This is the second one I bought because my supervisor complimented it at work, so I got him one for Christmas."

The support that Holstery has received for their products demonstrates that they have been successful in their mission of helping their customers carry their tools more conveniently, and find success in their projects without unnecessary effort. The company describes their tape measure holster as a tool that will firmly hold the tape measurer, keeping it in place with minimum risk of being accidentally let go regardless of the stress that may be put on it. Its Kydex construction makes the holster remarkably light without compromising on durability or strength?it is riveted with aircraft-grade hardware.

All of the company's premium holsters are hand-built from the finest materials available in North Idaho, where the company's founder and skilled craftsman, Josh Hartung, works conscientiously to ensure that each of the products stands up to the company's quality standards. To further emphasize the durability of these products, the company states that they are willing to offer free repairs or replacements to their customers if anything ever goes wrong.

The company's website includes more information on Holstery's products, including their tape measure belt clip, along with a thorough description of their features. Interested parties are welcome to reach out to Josh Hartung for further details as well.
