August 24, 2015 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

McLean, Virginia's Ambassador for Philanthropy recently announced a collaboration between its website and a printing company for future goodwill projects. The printing company, based in a small township in rural Virginia, specializes in the customization of print stickers and vinyl stickers, as well as the creation and printing of custom stickers, magnets, and logos. The announcement was made at Ambassador for Philanthropy's website.

Marjorie, a company spokesperson for Ambassador for Philanthropy, was thrilled to make the announcement. "As a company that seeks to venture out in order to help small businesses thrive, we at Ambassador for Philanthropy are happy to take this step," she said. "Our goals as a company were clearly achieved with this collaboration, we're ready to help thousands in need, as well as support a local business determined to make a change. It's a two-way street," stated Marjorie.

The printing company is a small startup customization of print stickers business manned by a four-person team. Its owner is actively involved in charitable projects in his local community. Ambassador for Philanthropy invited him on board after one of his community's projects was featured on Mclean's local newspaper. The result is a collaboration between a reputable charitable institution and a growing business that aims to contribute to society through small services.

One of Ambassador of Philanthropy's past projects was the distribution of reading materials to impoverished communities in the United States. The printing business was able to produce and print thousands of pages that helped a local town's disadvantaged youth learn how to read. "These are the kind of projects that allow Ambassador for Philanthropy to spread the word on charity," explained Marjorie. "We wouldn't have done it without the help of the printing service company we are working with, and together we're just getting started."

The company currently has a lot of printing of custom stickers projects lined up for the rest of the year, and it continues to look forward to helping thousands. They involve food drives and food distribution, academic sponsorship, women empowerment talks, and environmental activities. These goodwill projects cover the city of Mclean, as well as other rural parts of Virginia, before heading to the West Coast.

ambassador for philanthropy

Philanthropy is about treating problems at their roots. This is the difference between giving a man fish or teaching him how to fish. Someone who believes in and enacts the practice of philanthropy is called a philanthropist.
