January 21, 2020

January 21, 2020 -
Tuscaloosa, Ala.- On January 5th, local news station WRBC updated the public on the court?s assessment of bail bonds in the state of Alabama. Bail bonds and bail bonds companies in Tuscaloosa, Alabama have been receiving harsh feedback after the tragic murders of two girls, Aniah Blanchard (19), and Kamille McKinney (3) late last year.

Many people, including the families of Blanchard and McKinney, believe that their loved ones would still be here had their murderers not been released on bail. Both Blanchard and McKinney?s murders prompted the public and legal authorities to question the veracity of bail bonds.

Tommy Spina, a former judge and current criminal defense lawyer addressed the justified concerns of the public. He defended the bail bonds system and bail bonds agents. He cited the Eighth Amendment of the Constitution, which guaranteed the right for an arrested citizen to be allowed bail.

Alabama Bail Bonds, a Tuscaloosa bail bonds company, is one of Alabama?s premier bail bonds companies. They help those who have been incarcerated exercise their full rights as provided by the Eighth Amendment of the Constitution. They recognize the importance of bail bonds being used in the best way. Their bail bonds agents do not want their services to be abused by repeat offenders either.

In response to the public?s outrage, and to achieve a compromise between the law and the public, many lawmakers are promising to alter some aspects of bail bonds. Representative Chip Brown, a Republican representative from Mobile has promised to file an amendment during this years? legislation session.

The precise details of his proposed amendment are unknown. However, Brown stated in a Facebook post that his amendment, ?has the opportunity to save lives and keep the most violent of offenders from using the revolving door and getting right back out into the community.?
