(January 22, 2020) ? Sinkology plans to use their long-standing expertise in bathroom remodeling to lend clients a helping hand. Last year, the kitchen and bath renovation company published a blog article to guide customers on how to best approach installing and repairing their bathroom fixtures. According to Sinkology, the majority of clients don't consider the look of their fixtures during the remodeling process. They instead settle for whatever the fixture's default appearance may be, leading to multiple finishes across one bathroom and a distinct lack of aesthetic consistency.

To prove the importance of picking one finish and sticking to it, Sinkology asks their customers to look around at their bathroom. After guiding clients to examine their light fixtures, sink faucets, door handles, towel racks, and numerous other fixtures, they present one request: to count the number of different finishes they spotted.

Sinkology also acknowledges while this problem is quite common, they can offer a solution. Customers may turn to Sinkology to find a more cohesive look for their fixtures with a wide variety of materials. Some of Sinkology's offerings include yellow gold, brushed chrome, decorative ceramic, and hand-hammered stainless steel.

Sinkology also devotes a portion of this blog to advise clients on how to approach choosing the best finish for their bathrooms. They recommend clients choose a finish they not only find attractive but also fits the needs of the household members who use the bathroom and matches the cabinetry. Brushed finishes are ideal for homeowners who don't want to spend a lot of time cleaning their fixtures or who are remodeling their children's bathroom. Polished finishes, on the other hand, are the better option for adult bathrooms, especially for adults who don't mind wiping down and re-polishing their fixtures regularly.

In addition to these tips, Sinkology also informs customers of what to keep in mind as they replace their faucets, as well as which locations carry their fixture designs so interested customers can easily find them. This blog article is just one of many meant to help clients tackle their bathroom and kitchen renovations more easily.
