Respected Fishers, Indiana residential painting contractor, Walla Painting, is busy this time of year doing interior work. Interior painting is something that the company has worked very hard at over the years and subsequently has developed a reputation as one of the best in the area at doing it. Among the many different interior painting services the company offers, they have proven to be particularly good at the challenging task of painting kitchen cabinets.

Company owner, Jonathan Walla, talked about some of the challenges that painting kitchen cabinets pose by saying, "Asks any painter what is the most tedious type of painting work to do and they will tell you it's painting objects that have many surfaces and some depth to them like kitchen cabinets do. That makes it hard to do the long smooth strokes that professional painters love to use. This makes painting cabinets a very time-consuming job that has to be very meticulously done."

The company owner says that just like with any painting project, the key to getting kitchen cabinet painting to turn out great is in the prep work. They start by taking all of the cabinet doors off and removing the hardware from them. Walla says that after that is done, they will then do any surface preparation to the cabinets and the doors that is necessary. He says they will also cover the areas in the kitchen near the cabinets and mask them off so no paint inadvertently gets on them.

Walla went on to say that many people are choosing to paint their kitchen cabinets these days as opposed to replacing them. He says that's because of the tremendous amount of money people can save by doing this. The owner was also quick to add that his interior crews are so talented at painting kitchen cabinets that they come out looking practically brand new anyway.

He also noted that any type of winter interior painting work they do is getting more popular due to the fact that low VOC paints are now readily available. It used to be that people were reluctant to get interior painting in a home done in the winter because of the strong odor that petroleum-based solvents in the paint left behind. This bothered many customers because they could not ventilate their homes much during the colder months. Walla says low VOC paints are water-based so they give off very little odor once the painting is done.

One of the more unique interior painting services that the company offers is what they call "rent a painter for the day". The owner says it's the perfect way for those that have many odds-and-ends interior painting jobs they do not want to do themselves to get that painting work done. He says this can be anything from painting a single room to painting all of the exterior doors in a home. The customer hires one of the company's painters for a flat rate fee for the day and they choose what interior painting work they want to be done during that day.

Walla also likes to remind area residents that once the colder weather moves on and is replaced by warmer spring weather, Fishers painting contractors like them will start to see the demands for their services quickly peak. He says now is the time for those who are thinking about getting spring exterior painting projects done to start planning them. That way they can get all the details of those jobs worked out ahead of time and get them on the schedule before the mad rush of the spring painting season gets fully underway. The owner says planning spring painting projects early also gives people a better selection of dates that fit into their schedules conveniently.

For more information on this reputable Indianapolis area residential painter, Walla says they have detailed descriptions of the residential painting services they offer on their website. The owner went on to say that they are also pleased to answer any questions that customers have about their painting services over the phone and by email. There is even an information request form on their website that Walla says people can fill out to get a quick callback from them.
