Insurance Covered Breast Pumps is a company that dedicates all its time and resources to helping moms cope with the process of having a baby. From providing useful information for moms-to-be to providing insurance covered breast pumps and insurance covered Enfamil Enfacare Neuropro. The company has a new post that gives mothers about having a baby.

Today we are talking to one of our ICBP mamas, Katie, age 36, kids: Patrick, 7-months and August, 3-years-old about what she would tell her pregnant self if she was given the chance.

If I could go back in time and give my pregnant self some advice before became a mother, I'd have four pieces of wisdom I wish I could impart. This applies to both my pregnancy and motherhood journey. Those parts of pregnancy that were horrific which for me included non-stop vomiting, constant nausea, and horrible heart burn (glamorous, I know) they passed relatively quickly.

Today I was looking at my beautiful seven-month-old son and thinking how he was worth every single day of feeling sick and horrible. I honestly had forgotten all about that part of my pregnancy until a friend reminded me.

While you're in these difficult stages, it can feel like it may never end, but I wish I could go back in time and remind myself that it does and will end. Now I just need to remind myself of this when my 3-year-old wakes me up in the middle of the night. I'm not saying that worrying should be your default state, but I had a hard time getting pregnant and once it finally happened, I was a wreck. I felt guilty for feeling worried when what I should be feeling was overwhelming relief and joy.

However, looking back I wish I'd cut myself some slack. Being pregnant is not easily physically or mentally. Instead of trying to wish my worries away, I should have talked them out with my husband, family, and friends and acknowledged that they were normal.
