University Headquarters has released its first list of the most affordable college and universities in the US, by state. In each state, two schools were selected. Each of these baccalaureate-degree granting schools satisfy the requirements of not only low education costs but also overall value. The schools that were selected confer multiple bachelor's degrees to provide ample choice for students and their families. The site's researchers went to great lengths to provide comprehensive and objective information for its audience.

The list of most affordable colleges and universities from University HQ is designed to help students make the best financial and educational choice for them when it comes time to earn a degree. The list is sorted according to state and helps students determine the best overall school for a bachelor's degree. In fact, the list goes into more detail than the mere tuition numbers. University Headquarters went to great lengths to create a list that considered more than just tuition costs and made sure students would have an option that was close enough to save money on travel and in-school tuition costs as well.

The researchers sought out information related to each school's retention rates, graduation numbers, and more. Those that offer a great value are those whose students not only enroll, but who earn full four-year degrees. A few examples of the colleges are: Columbia Southern University, University of Alaska Fairbanks, Arizona State University, University of Arkansas, California State University and Colorado Mountain College.

Each school on the list is a four-year institution that confers bachelor's degrees. The goal of this list of most affordable universities was to guide students towards the degree type that will launch the most successful career. After all, professionals with bachelor's degrees start work with higher salaries and more responsibility than those with certificates or associate degrees.
