August 17, 2015 -

CHICAGO ? DWD Renovation, a general contractor known for quality in complex but affordable home improvement projects, shared guidance today related to the ideal time to complete home improvements before the winter season. Based on years of experience, DWD recommends avoiding the start of projects with extensive outdoor work after October.

?We have done so many porches, additions, and siding jobs that we have a very strong sense of when the cutoff date is for commencing work in this climate,? said Dave Hirsh, President of DWD Renovation. ?As we all know, Chicago turns into Siberia by the end of the year, and sometimes earlier ? you don?t want a project that can?t be completed until Spring.?

DWD Renovation, located in the Chicago neighborhood of Rogers Park, serves Evanston, the North Shore, Andersonville, Edgewater, and nearby suburbs. The company is known for working closely with clients to achieve home renovation and improvements that exceed expectations and beat both budgets and schedules. The firm?s standard practice is to assist the client at every stage, from detailed bid proposals, permit processing, kitchen cabinet selection, and fixtures and tile selection. This includes color and style selection of siding, tile design for bathrooms and kitchens, as well as other types of flooring. DWD provides architectural drawings for porch construction and home additions. Their in house designers are renowned for making kitchens come back to life.

Licensed and insured, DWD Renovation specializes in residential remodeling, including porches, kitchens, masonry, siding, windows, bathrooms, basements, painting and additions. Their website provides case studies, with before and after photos of kitchens, porch renovations, and many other sample projects. For more Information, click here.
