February 25, 2020 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Bed bugs aren't the only pest on the rise in the Indianapolis area. Many other local pests have continued to be a nuisance to both homes and businesses throughout Marion County. Pest Control of Indianapolis, IN is helping property owners battle these intrusive pests and rodents, helping residents get peace of mind.

"Every property is different and therefore has a different pest problem. Your neighbor may see few bugs while you can't seem to get rid of them. We customize our treatment plans to tackle the actual issues your property has or faces," the business owner said.

The owner stated that the most common pests they have been treating for lately in the Marion County area include rodents, roaches, spiders, ants and stink bugs. Rats and mice are capable of squeezing through tiny spaces so it's easy for them to gain access to a structure's interior. Unfortunately, they also chew on just about anything which can cause expensive damage for property owners.

"Cockroaches are gross pests and while we understand that most people are embarrassed to deal with them, it isn't necessarily their fault that they have them. There are many steps you can take to prevent these particular bugs, however, if your neighbor has them it's only a matter of time before you start noticing them as well if they're not being treated for," the manager said.

The manager added that the ant problems they have received calls for in recent months have been for ants in the kitchen. They are very small ants but they can be very difficult to get rid of in some instances. ?Seeking professional pest control in Indianapolis, IN is critical to get effective results. Many over the counter products that are for killing ants only target specific ant species. It?s important to read the labels when doing any kind of DIY pest control,? the manager said.

The company mentioned that they can also provide general treatments that can target a variety of insects and bugs but certain pests will require individual treatments. Residents can contact them by phone or by visiting pestcontrolindianapolis.net to learn more about their services. ?Our pest control Indianapolis IN experts are standing by to help you say good riddance to bugs and rodents, once and for all,? the manager concluded.
