According to Professional Painters of Hilton Head, colors can impact the mind and emotions, both positively and negatively. Choosing the right color for office walls can boost employees? motivation and productivity, they add. The local interior painter, therefore, suggests four colors to improve office productivity.

The first color option is green, which represents nature. ?It is a great color choice for offices where workers spend long hours. It is pleasant to the eyes and does not contribute to eye fatigue,? says Professional Painters of Hilton Head. Aside from incorporating different shades of green on walls, adding plants around the office also adds to achieve an earthy vibe.

The second color option suggested by the Best Painting Contractors in Bluffton, SC is blue. ?Studies have shown that employees are most productive and confident working in spaces that are painted predominantly blue,? according to the local painting contractor. The company adds that the color blue helps stimulate one?s

mind and helps soothe a person?s mood.

The licensed house painter also suggested the red color for those who want some intensity at the office. ?Red is a color that promotes feelings of excitement, energy, intensity, and a sense of urgency,? the Professional Painters of Hilton Head adds. The red is often used for environments that require plenty of physical activity or mental alertness like the gym. It is also known to improve appetite, thus painting the office pantry in red is the right choice.

Lastly, the house painters near me suggested yellow. These colors are suited for lounge areas and hallways to evoke optimism and ?sunny-disposition? among workers. It?s meanwhile a no-no for conference rooms.
