Insurance Covered Breast Pumps is an infant feeding equipment and accessory supplier that's based out of Bloomington, Illinois. As their name states, they claim many of the products that they sell are covered under most insurance plans. Evidence of that is they have announced the availability of Cigna breast pump coverage in most cases.

A company representative had this to say about insurance coverage of their products, "Our goal is to provide products that help create a positive breastfeeding experience for both moms and babies. Because of that, we carry a line of breast pump products and other baby feeding accessories that are among the highest quality ones made. As such, they are also some of the most expensive products in these categories. That's the reason our organization is contracted with most major medical plans and will work with parent's insurance companies so they can receive a breast pump at little to no out of pocket cost. That way a mom and her baby can just concentrate on the task of getting bigger, stronger, and healthier without having to worry about the expenses associated with that."

The company representative went on to add that they feel privileged to work with a storied insurance carrier such as Cigna. They are an insurance carrier that is based out of suburban Bloomfield, CT and Philadelphia, PA. It's one of the nation's older insurance providers as it can trace its roots all of the ways back to 1792. Cigna insurance and their subsidiaries are major providers of medical, dental, disability, life and accident insurance and related products and services, the majority of which are offered through employers and other groups such as government and non-governmental organizations, unions, and other associations. Cigna offers Medicare and Medicaid programs with health, life, and accident insurance coverage primarily to individuals in the U.S. and selected international markets. The company's medical insurance plans are currently offered in the following states; Arizona, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Florida, Georgia, Maryland, Missouri, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, and Texas. Cigna claims to have more than 10,000 hospitals, doctors, and specialists as part of their healthcare network.

According to the company representative, the reason that Cigna offers coverage on many of its products is due to the Affordable Care Act (ACA). That legislation requires most health insurance plans to cover breastfeeding support and supplies. This is an important benefit for women who are working mothers yet still choose to raise their infants on breast milk instead of manufactured baby formulas.

Among the products that Insurance Covered Breast Pumps offers that have a good chance of being covered for Cigna insurance policyholders is its Lansinoh® Signature Pro Double Electric Breast Pump. The company representative noted that this quality breast pump is not even offered for sale and is only available in insurance covered situations. One of the key features of this easy to use electronic breast pump is its ability to customize its pumping options. They are three different settings on it that are used to do this. It also features a closed pumping system; this guarantees that milk will not back up into the tubing or motor.

For those that are interested in purchasing any products that Insurance Covered Breast Pumps sells and are wondering if they are covered by their Cigna insurance plan, the company has customer service representatives to help with that. The company representative stated that their dedicated customer service team is very experienced and knowledgeable when it comes to insurance coverage of its products. The company's customer service representatives are available for help between the hours of 8:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. CST, Monday through Friday. Much information about the company and its products can also be seen on their website here at Insurancecoveredbreastpumps.com.

Those who find their breast pump purchase is covered by Cigna must submit a prescription from their doctor to qualify to get the product for little or no charge. Once purchased, the company ships most of its insurance covered breast pumps direct to a customer's home at no charge.
