Baltimore, Maryland - Roofing contractor Towson Roofing Pros, from Towson, Maryland, warns homeowners who didn't get roof inspections after the storms last year could expect leaks this Summer. Maryland homeowners who've survived the Winter without a leak may think they're in the clear. Unfortunately, they might also be mistaken.

"We see it all the time. Homeowners that don't get inspections after a year of heavy storms and wind storms assume everything is fine with their roof," says Julius Mills. "Our winter this year was very dry so homeowners may not notice roof damage or leaks. Then Summer comes around and homeowners are puzzled as to why they have leaks."

Towson Roofing Pros serves families all over Maryland with their roofing needs including roof repair, roof replacement and emergency hail and storm damage restoration. They can help work with a homeowner's insurance company to ensure that as much of the repairs are covered in order to reduce the money out of pocket for the Maryland homeowner. Financing is available and can be read about at <https://s3.amazonaws.com/towsonroofingpros-21204/press-releases/towson-roofing-company-offers-financing-for-homeowners-during-coronavirus-lockdown.html>.

Mills recommends that once homeowners discover a leak, immediately contain it with a bucket and give Towson Roofing Pros a call. Homeowners will want to ensure the water damage doesn't spread to other areas of their home. He recommends that homeowners move valuables away from the leak and cover remaining items with a tarp.

Contact a roofing professional immediately for a roof inspection to uncover the cause of the leak and to provide emergency repairs. Leaks never get better with time so it's important to move quickly. Homeowners can request a detailed roofing inspection from Towson Roofing Pros by visiting their website.

Towson Roofing Pros is an expert-owned roofing company, with a strong reputation for quality roofing services and many 5-star reviews. From old shingles in the bushes to rusty nails on the driveway, the mess of roof installation frustrates many homeowners. They offer a roofing installation process which eliminates trash and gets the job done faster.

The beneficial aspect of their roofing process is that it utilizes a specialized debris containment system that allows professional contractors to deposit worn shingles, packaging materials, and more into the container instead of onto the homeowner's lawn. For the homeowner, that means there's far less risk of debris and nails being left behind to cut or puncture tires, children's feet, or pet paws. No homeowner wants to risk their family's health when repairing a roof after a storm.

Using this system, roofers can extend the raised container over landscape features, like shrubs and external heating units, minimizing the risk for inconvenient property damage. In addition, customers find that Towson Roofing Pro's repair process drastically cuts cleanup so they finish projects in less time. "When a homeowner chooses to work with Towson Roofing Pros, he or she can feel confident their property will get back its curb appeal quickly, whether it's a home makeover, a fixer-upper property, or a long-time residence that simply needs a new roof," says a company representative. "Storms may have made your house a mess, but we're here to put it back together."
