Birmingham, Ala. ? Jefferson County bail bond agents strive to make the process of jail release as simple and painless as possible. The reputable source for bail bond information is looking to further inform the public of the potential conditions their loved ones may face if incarcerated. Due to the recent COVID-19 outbreak, a large portion of inmates are now susceptible and even deemed vulnerable regarding the virus in certain locations, due to the circumstances of their incarceration.

According to The Marshall Project, a nonprofit source for journalism covering criminal justice, a state representative Department of Corrections official said recently that it is closely monitoring the spread of coronavirus, noting that there are currently no increased confirmed cases in prison systems. Should someone become infected, the department says it is ?fully prepared to handle any potential cases.?

The risk of coronavirus to detained seniors is especially high due to their age and the difficulties of practicing basic disease prevention measures in prison. As the virus circulates into the prisons, advocates and public health officials are urging corrections departments to release their senior or immunocompromised prisoners. Alabama Bail Bonds is imploring the public to consider contacting a bail bondsman in Birmingham right away if a loved one is in a situation where they could be facing time in the prison system.
