At the moment, New York, Pennsylvania and New Jersey have ordered all non-essential businesses to close until further notice, advising the public to practice some form of social distancing (and other states have taken similar measures as well). While larger businesses and corporations will likely have a relatively easier task of surviving until the pandemic is over, smaller businesses that are forced to run on tighter margins will naturally be harder pressed to do the same.

In fact, a large percentage of the workforce has already been laid off as industries halt their operations, and several businesses have had to close their doors permanently already since they were already struggling prior to the COVID-19 outbreak. This also true for startups, which otherwise would have required a quick burst of growth to sustain themselves—a burst that simply cannot occur in present circumstances.

Congress recently passed a historic $2 trillion stimulus plan, which was soon signed by the President. However, as far-reaching as this piece of legislation is hoped to be, it has come too late for some businesses. Others who receive aid in the future may also find that the funds they receive are simply not enough. On the other hand, some businesses may simply find it difficult to apply for the aid since many of their peers are likewise forced to do the same. Unemployment rates alone have surged to record-breaking heights in recent days, and this number is likely to be indicative of the sheer number of businesses that will be seeking help in the immediate future, placing a strain on existing infrastructure and extending delays. Should this be the case, these parties may prefer to turn to other methods to finance themselves.

Qik Car Title Loans, alongside many other businesses who have the unique ability to both preserve their own operations as well as offer help to others in these trying times, is one such source of funding. The company uses their customers' vehicles as collateral in return for cash advances that are guaranteed to be both prompt and hassle-free in nature. Customers need only fill in their application online in order to be considered by the company. Use the following link to learn more: <https://qikcartitleloans.com>.

In addition to this method allowing small business owners to respect social distancing protocols, Qik Car Title Loans maintains an approval process that takes fewer than 15 minutes. Those who prefer to speak with a company representative are welcome to call Qik Car Title Loans directly as well, at which point they will be able to discuss their situation with the company's experts. Notably, the company has always had fewer restrictions for access to their services than other, more conventional lending institutions (such as banks).

For instance, they do not require that a customer have a stellar credit report, as the amount they can offer is almost wholly dependent on the value of the customer's vehicle, and this continues to be the case even now. A valid ID or driver's license, proof of income, the customer's car title and insurance and registration are often the only forms of paperwork that are needed. Once the application is approved, the customer can choose to have the cash deposited in their account or presented in the form of a check. It can also be collected from any Moneygram location. Currently, however, the company notes that customers may prefer to use the first option in order to minimize their need to travel, especially if they already utilize online banking.
