March 27, 2020 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Pensacola, Fla.-Craig Vigodsky, a Pensacola family attorney of nearly twenty years is urging his community to stay indoors and practice proper hygiene during the COVID-19 pandemic.

Pensacola, where Craig Vigodsky's law firm resides, is in Escambia County, Florida, an area that has seen a steady rise in the number of positive COVID-19 cases. Craig Vigodsky and his law firm see numerous amounts of people in their office daily and naturally fear the risk that such high levels of interaction could pose risk to themselves and their clients.

Pensacola consists of many people over the age of 50, as Pensacola is a popular spot for retirement in the Panhandle. However, this makes many more people at higher risk of contracting COVID-19. Craig Vigodsky is aware of this fact and is concerned about the well being of his community.

In light of many nonessential businesses closing during this time, Vigodsky is announcing to his clients and community to refrain from coming into the office if at all possible. Many law office appointments can be made over the phone or email. Face to face consultations should be avoided if at all possible. This will help prevent the spread of the virus both from clients to the law office and vice versa.

The child support lawyer in Pensacola, FL is also asking his community to practice proper hygiene and handwashing techniques. He's reminded his staff to follow the CDC's policies to wash one's hands frequently and to avoid touching your face.

The law office has also taken the time to clean frequently touched surfaces such as door handles, tabletops, phones and computers.

For those concerned about receiving the legal counsel they need, Craig Vigodsky promises that he'll take the time to discuss your circumstances and prospects for resolving your legal issues regarding family law, domestic violence and criminal defense matters.?

Despite the COVID-19 pandemic, Craig Vigodsky will still help anyone in need of legal advice.
