April 02, 2020 -

Eagan, Minnesota based Twin Cities PC Repair is reaching out to the community to announce that they will continue to offer computer repair services for the foreseeable future. Despite the ongoing pandemic, the company is committed to sharing the benefit of their expertise with customers who require assistance with their computers.

Minnesota Governor Tim Walz has ordered Minnesotans to stay home except for essential needs from March 27th through April 10th due to the nation-wide health emergency that is currently affecting all US citizens. As a result, most companies have moved their employees into a work-from-home schedule, making IT Support providers (who have now been classified by the Department of Homeland Security CISA as Essential Critical Infrastructure Workers) an essential part of every company's operations. During this unprecedented time where more people are relying on their home computers to complete most everyday tasks, Twin Cities PC Repair has announced that they remain in operation in order to look after the community and ensure any issues they may encounter with their computers are taken care of.

Patrick Jensen of Twin Cities PC Repair says, "In addition to working from home, many are using their PCs for their child's education, home banking, paying bills and even shopping. Now more than ever, it is important to make sure that your PC is working properly, and we want to reassure the community that we will always be there to make sure that this is the case. We'll be giving our best to make sure that your computer is back up and running as soon as possible if it happens to fail."

Jensen states that the company will continue offering all of their regular services during this time, including Apple and Mac repairs, Laptop repairs and Desktop Computer repairs. Hardware and software installations as well as Virus and Spyware Removal will also be available as usual. Jensen notes, however, that due to pressing circumstances, they will be operating with minimal staff, so he recommends that customers get in touch with the company through any available means prior to visiting the office.

Twin Cities PC Repair is one of the most prestigious Desk Top Computer Repair shops in the area. They are known among local residents for the outstanding customer service they offer, often going out of their way to make sure that their customers are satisfied. This commitment towards the community has earned them the favor of local communities, as many have stated that this shop is their go-to option whenever they need to repair their computers. The company's online reviews are a testament to the support they receive from their clients as, out of the 95 reviews that they have received on their Google Maps page, the company averages an outstanding 4.9/5-Star rating.

One of the company's most recent customer reviews, written by Matt Rizzo on the Google platform, says, "Patrick was very helpful in getting our son's Apple laptop back up and running quickly last week. The batteries had swollen so badly, it affected the performance. I don't like going to the big box places, mainly because of the lack of quality service (They just have so many projects going on). Patrick also recommended loading all the new security updates and current OS operating system, which we didn't even think of. His fees were very reasonable for the services we received, plus I was able to easily reach him by text and or e-mail if I had any questions."

Another comment written by Brandon Ferdig on the same platform says, "First off, Patrick is smart and knowledgeable, answering all my questions and ? most vital ? fixing the problem I came to him with (data recovery). What I found most impressive was how kind and easy to work with he was, from asking if I wanted anything to drink to offering me a few places to chill while he finished the work for me. Not only did I get the job done right but Patrick made it a genuinely pleasant experience. I highly recommend him."
