Dunloor, based in Lindfield, New South Wales, has released new products for wine lovers that enable them to enjoy different varieties of wine, without feeling compelled to drink the entire bottle. A common problem encountered by wine lovers is that once a bottle is opened, the air inside the bottle can turn the wine into vinegar. These wine accessories allow consumers to pump out the air from the bottle after enjoying a drink. In this way, they can drink the wine at a later time and enjoy the same taste as when it was first opened.

"You can enjoy a glass from a different bottle and variety every evening, without any worries of your wine tasting like vinegar," says Emily Baxter of Dunloor. "Enjoy your white wines with chicken one night and red with steak the next, and the wine will stay perfectly preserved for a later time."

The wine saver product that can be seen at <http://jeeveswinesaver.com/> features a stainless steel vacuum pump with two aerating wine bottle pourers and two push button stoppers, all wrapped up in an attractive gift box. The stoppers each have three sealed rings and feature a patented valve design that enables them to hold a powerful seal for days. Air cannot penetrate the bottle and the wine will never leak out of the stopper. Stoppers can be released with the simple pull of a button.

"The pump pulls out air, which causes wine to oxidize and break down," says Emily. "The stoppers stay in place, and help to keep wine left in the bottle fresh for up to 10 days, depending on the characteristics of the wine."

The no leak feature enables wine to be stored on its side, so it helps to save room in the wine cooler. The gift set comes with an easy to understand pictorial with instructions that ensure the bottles are preserved perfectly every time.
