April 15, 2020 -

Macon Personal Injury Attorney, Kenneth S. Nugent, P.C., has announced that the firm is still helping people with their personal injury needs despite the current COVID-19 crisis. They can do that because legal help is considered an essential service. The firm does admit that some changes to the way that they operate will be necessary in order to protect both their clients and employees during this unusual time.

Firm spokesperson, Tim Derrickson, elaborated further on this by saying, ?Unfortunately, even during the current pandemic that?s threatening the Macon area, people are still being involved in personal injury incidents and need all of the legal protection that they are entitled to under the law. We are here 24-hours a day to help. That?s because personal injury victims need the protections that the law offers to secure such things as medical care that?s paid for by the negligent party?s insurance and to get started on other aspects of the legal claims process such as accident investigations. These are legal matters that a personal injury accident victim simply cannot put off until the current crisis is over. Many times, some of these rights simply will not be given unless a personal injury victim has obtained strong legal representation. Here at Kenneth S. Nugent, P.C. ? Macon, we are making sure we are still here for our clients with the strong representation that they need as they go through a difficult time.?

According to Derrickson, there will be some major changes to the way that they consult with their clients at this unusual time in the interest of safety. They obviously will no longer be meeting face to face with them. Conversations will now take place solely over the phone or through the virtual world such as using Skype or other video communication services. He says they feel that most clients will readily accept this due to the current situation. The firm?s spokesperson also wanted to emphasize that just because conversations will be taking place differently, that does not mean the quality of their legal representation will be diminished in any way. They will still get the outstanding legal representation that this Macon Law Office is known for.

The firm?s spokesperson added that they can still provide their reputable legal services because the entire staff is now set up to work remotely. He says that is possible due to the fact that over the years they have developed electronic systems to protect and streamline their processes. This helps keep both clients and employees safe by limiting the need to conduct legal matters outside the home. Those visiting their website can even sign up for free access to their legal portal.

Derrickson says that one of the main reasons that they are still available 24-hours a day with legal help at this time is that there are many frontliners? out there working every day providing ?essential services?. He says that many of these medical professionals and other workers are putting themselves directly in harm?s way to help keep everyone else safe. If they become injured or sick, they are entitled to legal representation just like anyone else. The firm?s spokesperson says that road accidents are also still occurring every day too because people still have the need to drive around. Derrickson says that because of the reality of the situation, they want to be known as the Macon law firm that is still there to help their clients no matter what.

The firm?s spokesperson says that even during this very unprecedented time in history, they still will be providing legal representation for personal injuries caused by negligence, mishaps in the workplace, transportation and vehicle accidents, defective products, and nursing home abuse. He says the firm is still doing everything in their power to protect their client?s legal rights under the law at this time. For those that want to know more about this Personal Injury Attorney Macon GA, Derrickson invites them to go to the firm?s website to get all of the critical information on the firm?s services that they need.
