April 15, 2020 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Kenneth S. Nugent, P.C. based in Albany, Georgia, has issued an announcement stating that they are available to assist anyone who requires their expertise in the immediate future. Given the COVID-19 lockdown, the firm has mobilized their staff in order to work remotely in tandem with their clients while maintaining their high standards of service. They have also set up a Client Portal for those who need to share sensitive information. Those who wish to learn how they may stay safe while taking care of their legal needs may contact the Albany GA law office for further details.

Tim Derrickson, speaking on behalf of Kenneth S. Nugent, P.C. - Albany, says, "We take our obligation to serve our community very seriously. COVID-19 has unfortunately made some challenges even worse, but we will continue to help those who come to us regarding any of the issues we specialize in, including overtime and unpaid wages, insurance bad faith, medical malpractice, wrongful death and more. Continuing to serve our clients, and keeping them protected throughout the lockdown and beyond, is the right thing to do. That is why we are conducting business as usual with additional safety precautions. We want to thank each of our clients who have taken up the new ways we need to work to protect both them and our own staff. They know they can trust us to provide the most professional legal experience in the state."

Although many courts across Georgia have curtailed functions, the preparation for lawsuits and negotiation with other parties concerned has needed to continue. As such, all parties involved have to proceed with their business in a manner that protects everyone from the spread of COVID-19. Kenneth S. Nugent, P.C. has made sure that anyone can contact their legal teams via phone, email, fax, text or website chat. They have also put in place a secure Client Portal, free of charge, for those who need to share sensitive information. The firm will keep using their existing digital resources, including their website and their social media channels, to serve and inform their clients as well as the general public.

The firm recently celebrated their 30th year of running their One Call Unites Us All community outreach program, supporting both regional community events and local Georgia-based charities and nonprofit groups. The firm will continue to help communities through the current crisis and any future events, lending their time, skills, knowledge, and resources to help Georgia communities prosper. Though many events in 2020 have been cancelled or curtailed, the firm is extending their "One Call brings us together, One Call Unites Us All" approach to serve people across the state.

Many families and businesses are already feeling the economic pinch. Even before the lockdown commenced, those seeking personal injury lawyers in Albany GA may have lost income due to being injured by others. Kenneth S. Nugent, P.C. has served communities across Georgia for over 40 years, providing the professional advocacy and expertise their clients need to receive just compensation.

The firm was featured on USA Today in January, in an article concerning Roundup Lawsuits. The article highlighted the fact that Roundup has been linked to several types of cancer, and that the World Health Organization (WHO) has declared that Roundup's main ingredient, Glyphosate, is probably carcinogenic to humans. As a result, the firm has offered to undertake a free case evaluation for those who are farmers, farm employees, landscapers, golf course workers, gardeners, along with garden center and plant nursery employees.

Derrickson concludes, "We want to get the best possible outcome for each of our clients and have taken every opportunity to ensure that we seek all possible avenues for compensation. We would always recommend hiring a personal injury lawyer to anyone who has been injured through an accident or suffered as a consequence of negligence. Our team of lawyers can provide the multi-lingual support needed for those who may struggle to explain their concerns. We have built our 40 year reputation by doing our best to serve each and every client in order for them to obtain the settlement they deserve. We will continue to serve them through this crisis and beyond. If you need our assistance, we are just a phone call or a text message away."
