April 15, 2020 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Fleas are small parasites that can quickly infest a property after infesting cats and/or dogs. However, they will also bite people. Warmer months means higher risk for fleas, however because they can continue their life cycle inside, they can also be a problem in colder months. They often require the help of professional pest control provider in Fort Lauderdale to obtain relief.

"Many of our customers first think they may have a bed bug problem when they call us about getting bit in their house. Oftentimes they're actually dealing with a flea issue so we always recommend calling a pest professional when faced with any pest concern. That way you are treating the problem correctly and not wasting your time or money," the manager of Fort Lauderdale Pest Control stated.

Fleas can be a tedious pest to try and exterminate without the help of a professional. A property owner could spend a lot of time and money dealing with fleas, depending on the level of infestation. Fleas can jump vertically as high as 6 inches and easily jump from place to place. They can lay eggs anywhere including in carpet fibers, upholstery and bedding.

"If you have pets then you definitely want to check your pet over to inspect for fleas. Then if you find evidence of fleas, you have to inspect the pet's bedding and any other areas the animal tends to be. Then the list continues. Our expert pest control techs in Fort Lauderdale can help you exterminate these annoying insects and even offer prevention tips so you don't have to endure them again in the future," the manager added. "You will need to treat your home and your pets if you have fleas."

Properties that do not have pets can still experience a flea problem. Wild animals and critters can bring fleas into a yard and then the property owner can take them inside unknowingly. While the risk is slightly reduced for some properties, other pet-free properties could experience a higher risk if they live near wooded areas.

"We recommend that you give us a call if you suspect a flea or any pest issue in your home or business. We can inspect and determine the problem at hand and then suggest the best treatment plan to give you the best results. We work with your schedule so you can have convenient treatments when you need them,? the manager said.
