April 20, 2020 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Scottsdale, Arizona, based Rusty Angler is proud to offer valuable insight as to how families can obtain food through free fishing right now during these difficult times in the USA. As the Coronavirus pandemic continues, a rare uncertainty and concern over the possible economic ramifications of the crisis is on the rise. Many Americans are wondering how bills will get paid and food is to be put on the table when almost 20 million people have lost their jobs and filed for unemployment at the current time. Despite the present circumstances, there remains an invaluable resource for not only free food but much-needed recreation through fishing.

Rusty Angler hopes to help people take advantage of this opportunity by using their available time to fish. This information can bring in fresh, free food and allow people to enjoy the great outdoors. Their website offers a treasure trove of information on different types of fish, gear, and the best fishing techniques to land the biggest catch for the dinner table.

Fortunately, the early spring season brings about a wide variety of excellent fish that many can catch at the best fishing spot. Rusty Angler contains countless resources on how to find, catch, and enjoy the best fish. Spring bass fishing is one of the most popular recreational events for fishers. Highly informative content details the ideal temperature, bait, and circumstances in which a big mouth bass may be reeled in.

Rusty Angler founder, Russell Connor, discusses the importance of having accurate, reliable fishing information. "Our website aims to be an all-encompassing resource for fishermen and women, especially during this time when fishing may be one of the necessary means of putting food on the table. We want fishers to realize there is more to fishing than the rod and hook. There are a lot of people looking for information on fishing for beginners, and we want to help them learn the ins and outs of what makes a successful fisher. Small details such as using a thermometer to test waters or the proper bait to catch the desired fish are essential bits of information that we want fishers to take advantage of on our site," says Connor.

The website also offers in-depth information on how to catch other types of fish, such as catfish, pike, trout, walleye, and crappie. Catfish are widely available and frequent many waters, from small ponds to icy rivers. Pikes are mighty fish that tend to latch onto any bait within reach. Pike swims in the northern parts of the country. Trout tend to be trickier to locate. Trout are often found in specific streams or rivers. However, trout provide a delicious dinner that many fishermen find hard to refuse. Walleyes, as part of the perch family, are large fish often found in northern parts of the continent. Crappies are found in shallow waters and do not discriminate when it comes to different types of bait.

Over the past two years, fishermen and women of every experience level and background have found great techniques with the resources provided on Rusty Angler's website. Families are invited to give fishing a try not only for the free food, but for the excellent camaraderie it provides. Check out Rusty Angler for the latest tips and information on everything fishing.
