Glen Burnie, MD - With the Farmers Almanac predicting hotter than normal temperatures and a heavier rainy season throughout Spring and Summer of this year, roofing contractors in Glen Burnie and surrounding areas are preparing for the worst.

The roof is one of the most important components of a structure, but it often is taken for granted until it falls into disrepair. During the rainy season this year, Anne Arundel County roofing experts at Marriott & Sons Roofing are encouraging homeowners to prepare early and get a jump on possible damage to property, as well as gathering insurance claim information in the event of a disaster. Most roof systems last more than 20 years; however, routine evaluation and maintenance is necessary to extend its life and keep overall costs down. Marriott & Sons Roofing urges consumers to pay attention to wear and tear on their roof systems and to make informed decisions about roof system maintenance and replacement, should the need arise from severe rain damage.

“Professional roofing contractors play a vital role in our community, and severe rain storms, like what we saw last year, demonstrate the importance of the work we do,” says owner of Marriott & Sons Roofing. “Our clients’ complete satisfaction isn’t just a general statement, it’s a deep-seated core value that drives me every day and that includes being proactive.”

Prior to opening Marriott & Sons Roofing, Zachary Mathis served as a Senior Project Manager and was heavily involved with research and development of new techniques to extend the lifespan of both asphalt and torch down roofs. “I started Marriott & Sons Roofing primarily for several reasons. I saw that the storm damage arena was very poorly represented not only in terms of quality construction, a serious lack of integrity but also a significant ignorance about how insurance claims actually work. I know that others also do a good job in the Glen Burnie area, but it is typically the exception, not the rule.”
