How To Maintain a Burglar-Proof Residence

August 21, 2015 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

West London, AUG 21, 2015 ? For the nearly 20,000 people experiencing a break-in within the city of London, the aftermath of reporting to police and finding themselves secure again was overwhelming and problematic. With the growing prevalence of criminal activity involving break-ins, burglaries and even more serious robberies happening round the city at all hours it would be convenient to know how to handle the situation if and when it occurs. In order to help London residents out with this, Lockedout LockSmiths (www.lockedout-locksmiths.co.uk) has just published a new blog post authored by Brendan Connolly entitled 'A London Locksmith Can Help You Sort Things Out Following A Break-in'.

The article discusses what to do following a break-in and though some of it is common sense, many would be surprised at why these key points should be reiterated.

?One of the foremost things to remember is 'don't touch anything until AFTER the police arrive,?' states Connolly. ?While most burglars wear gloves, occasionally they get cocky and forget. Calling the police right away allows them to find the most distinctive and damaging evidence to help find the burglar ? fingerprints!?

Connolly's advice is derived directly from experienced professionals at Locked-Out Locksmiths, which specialises in both residential and business security. The article relates further how to take inventory, audit one's security and further, how to prevent future break-ins.

?Having come home from work to find my house broken into I was distressed and worried about the security of my house,? stated recent and satisfied customer Anna Jones. ?I needed to have my front door boarded up and needed to find a company who could come out in the evening. We called Brendan who came to our property in Clapham promptly. He explained what he would do and boarded up our door quickly and securely. We then arranged for him to return the next day to fit a new more secure door, which he did.?
