Phoenix, AZ based Covey Security is pleased to highlight the efforts of their security officers, many of whom have been assigned to protect critical services and infrastructure over the course of the COVID-19 pandemic. They currently stand guard in front of hospitals, grocery stores and distribution centers, all of which offer either goods or services that are invaluable to the public.

Covey Security Founder, Tucker Quayle, states, "Our services are essential for the community even in the best of times, and currently security is absolutely critical to the collective works to fight the spread of the COVID-19 pandemic. We secure places that local communities cannot afford to lose. You can rest assured that all of our staff are taking their responsibilities extremely seriously, and we are constantly working with our clients to improve the effectiveness of our security solutions."

With stay-at-home orders in place, it is increasingly possible that certain opportunistic or misguided individuals will attempt to visit such locations with ill intent. Covey Security has made it their mission to review the ongoing situation on a regular basis in order to identify which locations are most at risk, as well as what can be done to mitigate any issues that may arise. Given that part of their repertoire includes making risk assessments, the company's experts are well-equipped to analyze the potential outcomes of various scenarios. Following this, they can suggest improvements to a client's existing security measures and implement any new plans as required.

In addition to risk assessments, Covey Security offers facility inspections, parking enforcement, security escorts, lock-up services and more that clients find especially useful in the present climate. Security officers can also be armed if necessary, and they are able to utilize batons, tasers, pepper spray, restraints and firearms onsite. However, the company advises that clients consult with their security officers in order to determine which measures best suit their needs.

The company's Phoenix security services offer their clients a variety of advantages, particularly given their unique emphasis on maintaining the following four principles: being safety conscious, respectful, proactive and maintaining the dignity of all parties. As Quayle explains, these four pillars are representative of the company's core identity, and they play a role in every action that the company or their teams take.

As Covey Security states on their website, "In some businesses, safety and security are looked upon as merely a cost center. We view safety and security as a cost prevention center. Having highly trained safety and security personnel onsite mitigates risk and keeps costs down. Our officers deter crime, assist in difficult situations and stop accidents before they happen."

The strength of Covey Security's services are built on a foundation of good personnel. Their Phoenix security guards, for instance, are hired through a meticulous selection process that is designed explicitly to bring out the best of the best. The company also takes note of each of their officers' individual strengths in determining which assignments they are best suited for. This enables Covey Security to personalize the teams they send to each client, in turn ensuring that every security officer on duty is placed where they will be the most effective.

In light of the sacrifices their personnel are currently making by being on the frontlines of the pandemic, Covey Security is rewarding them accordingly. Security personnel who serve in these potentially dangerous positions are receiving regular bonuses.

"We value the contributions our security officers are making, especially during these uncertain times," Quayle says. "We want to reward them accordingly."
