August 28, 2015 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Care Me, a health and beauty company in Norcross, GA, is looking for endorsements for an electric device that is designed to remove calluses from the feet while also serving as a pedicure tool. They are looking for care givers, nursing school instructors and patients in areas, such as health agencies, nursing homes, assisted living facilities, free medical clinics, subsidized housing groups, foot clinics, senior centers, non profit foot clinics, public city health departments, and so on. The company will be giving away free products to people through these agencies in return for their endorsement.

"We have recently launched our product and it is already becoming a best seller callus shaver," says a representative from Care Me. "We want to show the world just how good the product is by asking for official and professional endorsements. Effectively, it is a win-win-win situation: professionals received a high quality product, patients receive better care, and we receive free publicity."

They are specifically looking for those who work with elderly people. They are often in need for what truly is an effective callus remover in order to address their hard skin on the feet. In many cases, elderly people are unable to afford to regularly go for a professional pedicure. At the same time, looking after their own feet properly is often very difficult because they do not have the right tools.

"Our callus shaver is the perfect tool for the needs of elderly people in particular," adds the representative from Care Me. "We are so sure that our product is superior that we are ready to compete with some of the world's best known brands, such as Amope, Dr Scholl and Ejomi products, as well as any other brand in the same price range as ours. We have real faith in our products."

Care Me also wants to highlight that they feel they are making a contribution to the community by offering their product for free to endorsers. Because it enables people to have a professional pedicure without difficulty, people will find it easier to have healthier feet. Only limited quantities of the free callus removers are available. As such, those who want to be considered as endorsers are encouraged to sign up as soon as possible.
