Rancho Cucamonga, Calif.- As a part of an effort to conserve water in the state, California is now requiring Low Flow Toilets. Drain Experts, a plumbing company in Ranch Cucamonga, CA, is highlighting this new requirement for the state. Each home in the state built longer than 20 years ago is now required to have low flowing toilets, shower heads and all interior faucets.

All homes built within the last 20 years have already had this requirement upon building. Any home built before 1994 will need to have these new fixtures should they choose to remodel or sell the home. This new law is also extended to commercial property and multi-family buildings. California is the first state to enact a law for its residents.

Low-flow toilets may be an issue for plumbing systems in the area as less water results in less pressure pushing down waste. Homeowners and property managers in the area should be aware that these new faucets could lead to backups in plumbing. Homeowners should have their pipes cleaned and looked at professionally when switching to low-flow toilets to stay proactive.
