Crestview, Fla.- Many retail stores are being forced to declare bankruptcy due to the coronavirus (COVID-19). They will mostly be declaring Chapter 11 bankruptcy, meaning they might not have to close shop. Lewis and Jurnovoy, a local bankruptcy attorney in Crestview, FL, is highlighting what bankruptcy means for retail. COVID-19 is affecting the economy in huge ways but the companies filing for bankruptcy may still be able to stay open.

Chapter 11 bankruptcy allows retail companies the freedom to keep fighting. While some companies have closed due to bankruptcy there have also been some to come out of it such as American Airlines and Macy's. Chapter 11 bankruptcy gives the company time to get their affairs in order and make things right with their debtor.

While under bankruptcy, the company will have to run their spending by the courts. The important information here is that the life of retail may still go on even with numerous companies filing for bankruptcy. It is not time to panic regarding the life of retail.

Crestview bankruptcy lawyers, Lewis and Jurnovoy, are dedicated to the local community and providing the most up to date information regarding bankruptcy during this unprecedented time. Martin Lewis and Steven Jurnovoy have been serving the local community as partners since 1998.
