Seattle, Wa.- Home plumbing is being used more than ever resulting in a greater potential for plumbing emergencies. With social distancing and stay at home orders, Raymark is highlighting emergency plumbing in Seattle, WA as everyone adjusts to a new normal. It is important to know plumbing companies are considered essential businesses during this time.

A busted pipe or clogged sewer can affect the health and safety of the public making these issues a true emergency. Plumbing services help to maintain the safety and sanitation within residences. Even with social distancing concerns, it is important to call a plumber and not let the health hazard remain. Do not hesitate to call a plumber if there is an emergency, but make sure to ask about measures in place to maintain social distancing while addressing the plumbing or sewer emergency.

Plumbers in the area including Raymark have measures in place to maintain social distancing while addressing the issue. In fact, most plumbing issues can be fixed without ever entering a home. It is important that residents see plumbing as the emergency that it is, to prevent other health issues among the already concerning pandemic.
