Insurance Covered Breast Pumps has just announced that Nutramigen Formula for babies is now being covered by many health insurance policies. The company knows this because they are one of the countries leading suppliers of insurance covered breast pumps, support equipment, and other infant nutritional products. They have such a close working relationship with so many health insurance providers in the country, they make it their business to know what costs their customers may be able to save on insurance covered baby formulas.

A company spokesperson had this to say on the matter, ?We here at Insurance Covered Breast Pumps take much pride in offering our customers top-notch customer service. Part of that entails being in the know when it comes to products of ours whose costs may be able to be offset by a customer?s insurance plan. More and more we are seeing these cost savings being applied to the baby formula products that we regularly carry. We realize that feeding a child with formula is a significant expense when added up over time, so we are happy to help in any way that we can. Our company will continue to work hard to make our customers aware of which products of ours have full or partial insurance coverage eligibility on them.?

The company spokesperson went on to say that Nutramigen is made by Enfamil which is one of the most trusted names in baby formula in the entire world. This formula is specially made for colicky infants, infants that have formula allergies, or infants that have other special feeding needs. Enfamil states that some parents may see benefits in this formula?s use by their babies in as little as 48-hours after the first feeding. The company spokesperson went on to say that babies with colic can be identified in several ways. Symptoms of colic include crying or fussing for more than 3 hours a day, crying repeatedly for no obvious reason (they have been fed and have no dirty diaper), they cry at the same time each day, or they tend to clench their fists or curl their legs while crying. This is a condition that can severely increase a new mother?s stress level and needs to be addressed as soon as possible. The company spokesperson also acknowledged that babies with formula allergies show some specific signs too. These include frequent spitting up, vomiting, excessive crying, frequent diarrhea, possible blood in the stool, and hives.

According to the company spokesperson, it?s not enough that a customer?s baby is showing signs of colic or food allergies to be eligible to have all or part of the child?s Nutramigen formula requirements covered by insurance. These conditions must first be confirmed by a dedicated health professional and a prescription must be written for it. Insurance Covered Breast Pumps customer service team is fully prepared to help once this is done. All a parent has to do is go to the company?s website and fill out the form that can be found on the ?Am I Covered? webpage. A company representative will then contact that customer?s insurance carrier and then relay back to the customer whether they are eligible for Nutramigen formula full or partial coverage. The company will also advise the customer as to whether or not an alternative product may be used for the same purpose.

The company spokesperson went on to say that for those mothers that are breastfeeding, a large majority of the time the breast pumps that they carry will be covered under a customer?s insurance. This is due to new guidelines that were added to health care coverage under the Affordable Care Act. The breast pumps that the company carries are not old-fashioned devices that resemble a bicycle horn either. As the company spokesperson noted, they are state of the art machines that take the guesswork out of extracting breast milk for future use. They are fully automatic, comfortable to use, and very easy to clean up after the process has been completed.

Parents who are seeking more information on whether or not their Nutramigen baby formula needs may be covered by their insurance can go to the company?s website at Insurancecoveredbreastpumps.com for contact details and other information on this subject.
