LowCountry Home Magazine, the Best Interior Design Magazine in Bluffton, SC, features several ways on how to upgrade outdated home interiors and increase its resale value.

On the latest blog published by LowCountry HomeMagazine, the company points out why design decisions are essential for those who have plans to put their homes on the market. The article aims to help South Carolina residents get rid of outdated trends.

First on the list is the use of tile and dark granite counters, which gained popularity in the early 2000s. To keep up with the trend, homeowners should ditch tiles with hard to clean grout lines and replace granite with quartz, stone, or marble in lighter, neutral shades. This look provides a minimalist modern aesthetic that is open and bright.

The Top Interior Design Magazine in Bluffton also says that another mistake most homeowners do is eliminating closets. Extra storage, in fact, adds home value. With the right furnishings and textiles, a smaller bedroom can feel cozy. Good storage can also help reduce clutter.

Another home design to avoid is Hollywood mirror lights, which can be expensive. Instead, homeowners should opt for lighting that produces a more natural glow.

The wallpaper trend, which was gone for a decade, also came back just recently. Nowadays, homeowners are using it in a myriad of cool, creative ways like on accent walls, in powder rooms, and even on ceilings.

For the floors, carpets, which are relatively inexpensive and feel great underfoot, are still popular today. For those who plan to sell their homes, upgrading the flooring is the best option. Wood and tile floors, which are both durable and easy to clean, remain as top choices among homeowners, they added.
