KENNESAW, GA.? Local real estate pro Chris Cain is a die-hard outdoorsman and blends his passion for land and wildlife with a career in land sales.

Cain specializes in Southern hunting, farm and timberland and says that unfortunately, landowners sometimes don?t understand the outdoor opportunities that add value to property.

?Northwest Georgia has lots of opportunities for sportsmen,? said Cain. A lot of landowners don?t realize the true market value of their property when outdoor recreational opportunities are involved.?

Tracts with wooded, tillable or CRP acreage, pasture and water make for prime habitat for wildlife. In many cases, properties in the region can help pay for themselves because of the returns from farming and timber. Farmland has long been a solid long-term investment and a recovering housing market has increased the demand for quality timber.

Cain?s expertise in Georgia land comes from working as a Land Specialist for Whitetail Properties Real Estate ? the industry leaders in hunting, ranch and farm land.

According to Cain, world-class hunting for white-tailed deer, waterfowl, upland birds, wild hogs and fishing attracts outdoor enthusiasts and investors from inside and outside Georgia?s borders, and from metro areas within reasonable driving distance.

?The time is right to market land as a hunting and recreational property,? said Cain. ?As a national company operating in more than 20 states, we offer exposure to a nationwide network of outdoor enthusiasts and land investors ? many of whom are already considering owning property in Northwest Georgia?
