Eric Collett, Principal & CEO of A Mind For All Seasons®, based in Boise, Idaho, has released a video to announce the reopening of their Brain Therapy Studio, which had to be temporarily closed during the COVID-19 crisis. The video also provides a quick tour of the Brain Therapy Studio Boise Idaho location where they have been using a research-based multimodal treatment approach for helping patients with dementia, or those who want to prevent it to truly enhance their cognitive health.

Eric says, "Unfortunately, we had to temporarily shut down our beautiful Brain Therapy Studio located in Boise Idaho during the COVID-19 crisis. But I'm excited to let you know that we're fully open again."

He continues, "For the last several years, my business partner, Randy Vawdrey, who is our chief medical officer, and I have been working on a research-based multimodal treatment approach to help people living with dementia, or those who want to prevent it to really improve their cognitive health. And we've had phenomenal results!"

Eric is proud to point out that they have had significantly positive results using their treatment approach. One client improved his cognitive test score from 16/30 to 30/30 and moved back home with his wife. Others have improved from scores in the mid teens to the mid twenties and have become far more functional. However, not all their clients had the same results, so they looked into the possibility of using a number of medical devices that may improve things such as energy production, blood flow, calming inflammation, and other factors. With the addition of these devices, they were able to get better results, so they decided to build their Brain Therapy Studio as a place where people can come to receive all the treatments, coaching and guidance they need to improve brain functioning.

In the tour provided in the video, Eric mentions a number of medical devices that they use. These include exercise with oxygen therapy red light therapy, pulsed electromagnetic field therapy, audio visual entrainment, RightEye, and far infrared sauna.

These therapy devices are part of a very comprehensive program Eric and Randy Vawdrey have developed called The Enhance Protocol®, which was inspired by the groundbreaking research studies conducted by Dr. Dale Bredesen. In his research, Dr. Bredesen found that the pathway leading to dementia is unique for every person. He has then taught various practitioners all over the globe how to identify and treat many of the root causes of dementia.

What Eric and Randy Vawdrey did in The Enhance Protocol was to build tools, resources and systems around Dr. Bredesen's approach, develop a coaching program to deliver it, and add treatments with medical devices that amplify the effectiveness of the other treatments. They also made use of the work of different experts in various fields, such as organizational behavior, integrative and functional medicine, and supplements.

The Enhance Protocol is very comprehensive, but it is tailor-fitted to each client, based on age, current illnesses, physical condition, supplements, medications, life experience, and specific biological markers. The first step for clients starting with the Protocol is to undergo a broad panel of laboratory work and cognitive evaluation to determine a baseline. From there, the team at A Mind For All Seasons will prepare an extensive personalized treatment summary, coach the participant through various shifts toward a more brain healthy lifestyle, and implement the other treatments available in their Brain Therapy Studio.

People who would like to learn more about The Enhance Protocol® may want to visit the website for A Mind For All Seasons®, or contact them via telephone or email. It is also possible to enroll in their online 'virtual' version of The Enhance Protocol on it's own dedicated website, which can be found at <https://enhanceprotocol.com>.
