The chiropractic clinic may be able to help motor vehicle accident victims in the treatment of a number of common injuries. These include back injuries, neck injuries, head injuries, and minor injuries. Back injuries are quite common for victims of auto accidents. This is because the violent force will usually cause the body to hit a certain part of the car, resulting in varying degrees of injury to the spinal cord. The result is a back injury with an impact that ranges from mild to severe spinal cord paralysis. Chiropractors have the necessary expertise when it comes to the diagnosis and treatment of spinal cord injury. By using spinal cord manipulations and adjustments, chiropractors may be able to successfully realign and restore the spine that will result in alleviating the pain symptoms.

A typical neck injury caused by a car accident is whiplash. It should be noted that whiplash can occur even when the car collision is considered to be minor. This is because it does not really require an excessive force to cause a person to suffer from whiplash injury. This is a soft tissue injury resulting from the head and neck being jerked in a forward and backward motion. Whiplash may result into severe neck pain, particularly if it is left untreated. The problem is that the accident victims may be unaware that they have whiplash injury because the symptoms are usually delayed by hours or even days. Thus, it is their recommendation to car accident victims to seek chiropractic care as soon as possible after the collision. Chiropractors will be able to find out if the victim has suffered from whiplash injury and may then provide the necessary chiropractic care for whiplash.
