Maria, a representative for Newman Windows - Irvine, says, "If your windows have seen better days, it can impact the entire look and feel of your home. That's not all, however, because heat and air conditioning can escape from each window when they start deteriorating, making your house more cold and increasing your overall energy bill. Getting new window replacements will help, and increase your home's value and appeal, but they aren't exactly cheap. We all know that there's a cost associated with getting your windows replaced. Even though new energy efficient windows can save you hundreds a month on utility bills, you need to know the upfront expense before you make any home improvement decision."

According to Newman Windows - Irvine, the average cost of a new window replacement ranges between $650 and $1,500 in Southern California. The actual price a homeowner will pay depends on a few factors.

One major factor is the window type. For example, the average cost to install a storm window is $275, while the cost to install a bay window could be over $3,000. Therefore, it's difficult to get an estimate on the average cost without knowing the type of windows one is looking to replace.

For a general estimate, if a homeowner wants to replace mostly standard-sized windows, their average price should be close to the lower range of $650. With the average home in Southern California having 10-15 windows, replacing all of the windows in a home can average $7,500 for standard windows. However, this average is for standard replacement windows. For high-end and/or custom work, one can expect an increase up to 50%.

Newman Windows - Irvine also explains what goes into calculating the cost of window replacements. In their blog post, the company states that, when comparing windows, there can be many price variations even within the same window type. This is because there are many factors to consider, including brand, quantity, size, material, glass, single or double pane and installation costs.

Maria says, "When you are looking to replace your windows, the expense will almost certainly be in the thousands. You might be tempted to cut costs by choosing the cheapest possible window. This is almost never a good idea. Although window replacement ends up being a major home expense, windows are crucial to your home's value and longevity. As a result, skimping now might mean your windows won't last as long as they should."

Despite this, the company lists several ways homeowners can save costs during window replacements in the blog post on their website. One such way is to opt to complete the window replacement job all at once. The company explains that, when one buys all the windows at once, they may be able to save extra money because it's a volume purchase. This is especially true where a large home is concerned. Another tip the company provides is to inquire if there are any specials or savings, such as seasonal or anniversary discount offers. The full blog post on the company's website contains a number of other helpful tips.

Maria says, "Whatever windows you want to replace, in whatever manner, we can guarantee that Newman Windows can help. We have a team of experts who can help you choose the perfect windows for your home and then get it installed. If you're thinking of getting your windows replaced in Southern California, get in touch with us now, and we can schedule a free in-home estimate."
