Grace Roofing and Construction LLC, a High Point, NC roofing contractor, has announced that they have recently posted an article on their site that indicates the five questions homeowners need to ask their contractor. Asking those questions is critical because having a roof replaced is costly. In fact, according to recent reports, the low-end average cost of shingle roof replacement in North Carolina is $6,426. It is certainly an amount that people can't afford to throw away but that is exactly what would happen if the roofing contractor chosen was not really qualified for the job.

Richard Sakowski, owner of Grace Roofing and Construction LLC, says, "One of the best ways to ensure you choose the best roofing contractor in your area is also one of the simplest. Ask the questions your roofing contractor doesn't want you to ask. Five straightforward questions can be the difference between coping with a high-stress, long-term situation, or enjoying an investment in your home. Every family deserves a strong roof to protect their home - and asking these 5 questions can help you get it."

The first question to ask a roofing contractor is whether they are licensed and insured. When contractors are licensed, this means that they have gone through the licensing process, which has a number of requirements. This means that they have provided proof of identification, education, and experience. Also, they have verified their address, paid a licensing fee, and went through background and credit checks successfully. And having insurance means both the property and the client are protected in case something goes wrong during the roofing project. They should be able to provide the client with the exact amount of their liability insurance coverage.

Secondly, a High Point roofing contractor should ensure that the property is protected during the roofing project. This is important because a roofing project may cause damage to the exterior of the home, the guttering, and the lawn.

Another question to ask the roofing contractor is how long the roofing project will take. It should be noted that the length of time required to finish a roofing project will vary, depending on the kind of roof. Nevertheless, an experienced roofing contractor should have a good estimate of how long a specific roofing project will take to complete. Knowing how long the project will take will help the homeowner in scheduling other projects.

Another essential question to ask is what would happen if the weather suddenly turns bad. This is important for homes in North Carolina because rains and heavy snow can happen unexpectedly. A roofing contractor will usually have something ready to physically cover any part of the roof that they are still working on when the weather suddenly turns bad. Their answer to this question will usually reveal how much they really care about their clients.

And finally, homeowners may want to ask with whom they will be dealing with on site during the roofing project. This is important because homeowners will need to know that specific person with whom they can talk to in case they need to discuss something about the project. An experienced team of roofing professionals will usually have a team leader, supervisor, or project manager on site. If the team has no leader, it is a risky situation. That would mean each of the workers will be doing whatever they want with no one to guide them and impose some kind of control. The quality of the roof may suffer and the risk of accidents will be much higher.
