July 17, 2020 -

Tuscaloosa, Ala. ? In these unprecedented times, it has never been more important for individuals to come together and support each other. Alabama Bail Bonds, a trusted Tuscaloosa bail bondsman, could not agree more and would like to acknowledge and applaud two Alabamian women for creating a program to assist those in need of bail money.

These two women are both University of Alabama alumni and have a passion for helping their Tuscaloosa community. They believe that the current bailout system criminalizes poverty due to the astronomical cost of bail. It is easier for individuals with high income to get released from jail than it is for low-income individuals. Because of this, the two women want to help raise money for those who cannot come up with jail release funds. To achieve this, they founded a non-profit organization called Tuscaloosa Bailout. They have already raised around $7,000 for inmates.

The cash bailout system has been a hot topic in America as of late, called into question because it makes the process difficult for those with low income. This difficulty has created an especially negative situation during the current pandemic because inmates have an increased risk for the coronavirus. Tuscaloosa Bailout exists to combat these negative situations. Volunteers regularly visit the jail, so they are able to assess each inmate through surveys and consent forms, which aids the selection process of the bail assistance receivers. Donations to this non-profit organization are welcome via online or by check.

In the midst of these difficult times, Alabama Bail Bonds is proud to see individuals taking the initiative to help those in less fortunate situations. As a bail bonding company in Tuscaloosa, AL, they understand that for low-income families, the cash bond system poses tough challenges. They are dedicated to providing those in need with as much bail assistance as possible. For more information, give them a call today at (205) 339-7109 or visit them online at alabailbonds.com.
