The Brown Firm - Atlanta, a firm that focuses on personal injury and accidents, has published a new blog post on their site that reveals when it is too late to get an Atlanta car accident attorney. The article explains that the deadline is specified by the statute of limitations, which is two years after the car accident. There are a number of reasons why this particular deadline was set in place, but the key one has to do with evidence. If one were to begin building a case two years after the accident, it would be very difficult to gather any relevant evidence, such as a CCTV of the accident, or track down any witnesses of the accident. Furthermore, it would not be reasonable for an adult to put in a claim for a past injury caused by a fall at a certain amusement park, for instance, that occurred when he was still a child.

Aside from the deadline of two years specified by the statute of limitations, there are two other requirements to be able to file a claim in court for a car accident. The first one is that there should be a clear third party who is responsible for the accident due to negligence. The negligent party doesn?t have to be an individual, but it can also be an organization, such as the trucker?s employer or the manufacturer of the car that had a defective part. The second requirement is that the negligent party must have the capacity to pay for the compensation that is being sought. Oftentimes, this is covered by the insurance company of the negligent party, although at times it may not be that simple.

Harry Brown, a managing attorney at The Brown Firm, says, ?Two years. That?s how long you have to file for a personal injury car accident claim in Atlanta.?

He continues, ?And remember that hiring a personal injury attorney will not cost you anything upfront. A PI attorney works on a contingency fee basis. This means that when you hire an attorney you pay nothing until you get your settlement. At the time you receive your car accident settlement, your attorney will take a small percentage for their legal fees. This means hiring an attorney has no risk to you! If you do not win a settlement, you do not pay!?
