Long Island, NY - To better serve its customers, New York-based roofing company All Pro Remodeling has chosen to use GAF roofing system components for its roof replacements & repairs.

The GAF line includes Timberline shingles, Cobra attic ventilation, Deck Armor roof deck protection, and WeatherWatch and StormGuard leak barriers. All Pro believes the GAF line of products will enhance the durability and aesthetic quality of its workmanship.

Timberline shingles, the number one selling shingles in North America, are fully guaranteed and have a variety of style choices, many with lifetime warranties. From basic protection to designer, Timberline provides options for a wide range of budgets and projects.

A specialty line of shingles is also available and includes impact-resistant and energy-saving shingles. Energy-saving shingles are light in color and reflect sunlight to help reduce attic heat build-up and save energy.

Aside from shingles, GAF also provides TruSlate roofing materials for those who prefer slate roofs. TruSlate comes in a variety of colors.

The Energy Star Manual released by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency states the average household in America spends more than $2,200 a year on energy bills, with almost half going to costs for heating and cooling.

With cooler weather near, it is important to check on the integrity of a home's shingles, attic ventilation and leak barriers before the snow falls. Among the biggest problem areas mentioned are air leaks from vents. Other areas needing attention before winter include gutters and downspouts.

According to GAF, a quality leak barrier will create a watertight seal that keeps water out of the vulnerable areas of a roof. Both leak barrier products from GAF - recipients of the Good Housekeeping Seal - provide protection against leaks due to water damming in gutters, and extreme weather like wind-driven rain and ice storms.

By using GAF products for its repairs and renovations, All Pro believes it can prevent potential problems for customers caused by the changing seasons.

With a Long Island roofing company A rating by the Better Business Bureau, All Pro has proven consistency in providing customers with quality roofing, siding, windows and general home improvement services.

All Pro continues striving to exceed customer expectations with its choice in GAF roofing products. From the design stages through installation, clients' projects and homes can be serviced safely, efficiently and in a budget-friendly manner.
