Precision Signz, a sign making business in Bettendorf, IA, has demonstrated its commitment towards sustainability and protecting the environment with its yard signs. The yard signs provided by the company are made using recyclable materials. In so doing, they ensure that people won't encounter any problem when disposing of their signs after a campaign and that no damage is done to the planet in the process.

"We only have one planet to call home, and we must protect it," says Jeff Hartman from Precision Signz. "Oftentimes, our customers order thousands of signs from us because they are running a campaign. When campaigns order signs they are typically only used for a relatively short period of time. We want to make sure that these signs don't all end up on a landfill site polluting the environment, which is why we use recyclable materials."

Not only are the signs made from materials that can be recycled, they are also made partially from recycled materials. This means that the company is actively reducing their carbon footprint. One example provided by the company with website at PrecisionSignz.com is their #5 Corrugated Plastic, which are made in part from recyclable materials. Another example is found in the polycoated board signs. These can all be fully recycled as they are made from the same materials as milk cartons. Additionally, they have been created using recycled cardboard and are 100% biodegradable.

"We currently have our Corrugated Plastic, our polycoated cardboard signs and are polybag yard signs, which are all fully recyclable as a #5," adds Jeff Hartman. "Most are also fully or partially made from materials that have already been recycled. Then, there are our steel wire sign stands, which can be reused or re-purposed, or they can be scrapped and/or recycled."

Precision Signz offers a range of different signs, banners and accessories to hold these in place. They are fully committed to making sure they do not have a negative environmental impact either in the production or the usage of their products. They feel that businesses in particular should publicly commit to lowering their carbon footprint, and want to lead by example in these efforts.
