Nature's Hangout, located in Cedar Crest, NM, is helping bird enthusiasts to prepare their garden for the coming fall and winter, through the release of a new bird feeder. It is important to make sure birds are well-protected and have opportunities to feed during the colder months. The time to prepare gardens for this is now and the company is offering a bird feeder for fall and winter to help people who love to watch birds.

"We are at the end of summer, and birds are currently scoping out the various yards they will visit during the winter," says Nature's Hangout Mark Harden. "By preparing a garden now so that it is bird-friendly, people can increase the chances that their garden would be chosen as prime spot. This also means that people can continue to enjoy watching birds, while also contributing to the survival of local wildlife."

Bird feeders should be set up as soon as possible, and they should not be moved from the chosen location anymore. This will allow birds to know exactly where they can go for food and water during those months of scarcity. People often don't realize the extent of preparation wild birds go through and being able to give them a helping hand is something everybody could engage in.

"If people wait to put food out until the cold weather has already arrived, they may find that no birds actually come and use it," adds Mark Harden. "Birds will only go to where they already know food will be provided, keeping the distance as short as possible. It is actually very rare, therefore, for a bird to come to a garden that did not show signs of food during the end of summer and early fall months."

The window bird feeder can be ordered now to prepare for the coming months. The feeder is window mounted, which has the added benefit of offering additional protection to birds. It has been demonstrated that a bird is less likely to try to fly through a window if there is a feeder on it. Furthermore, if the bird does try to go through the window, it will be at a slow speed, which means that it will not likely be injured.

The bird feeder is easy to mount and it ensures that people can continue to enjoy watching the birds. It comes with a safe landing area and it has a top cover so that the food is protected from rain and snow. Furthermore, when the birds are feeding, they are also protected from the elements.
